INTRODUCTION

There is much about the current competing motions in this case on which the plaintiffs and the defendants agree.

We agree that a plaintiff in a civil action under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) may not use 50 U.S.C. section 1806(f) as a fishing expedition in an effort to discover whether the plaintiff was subjected to electronic surveillance or to force a government defendant to confirm whether the plaintiff was surveilled. The present 1806(f) motion, however, is no such effort. We seek neither discovery nor confirmation of plaintiffs' electronic surveillance, but simply to use portions of a document that we have already seen to help establish something that we already know and that is now shown as a prima facie matter by a rich lode of non-classified evidence.

We also agree that a plaintiff in a civil FISA action may not invoke section 1806(f) absent a showing that the plaintiff was actually subjected to electronic surveillance, and that it is not enough for the plaintiff merely to be a type of person targeted by the President's warrantless surveillance program. But the public record and other non-classified evidence described in plaintiffs' amended complaint demonstrates that they are not just likely targets. Plaintiffs' amended complaint sets forth direct and circumstantial evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable inference on a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiffs were actually surveilled.

Where we disagree with defendants is in the "what" and the "when" of the showing required to invoke section 1806(f).

Defendants contend that the "what" to be shown on this 1806(f) motion includes the warrantless nature of plaintiffs' electronic surveillance. But section 1806(f) gives an "aggrieved person" the standing necessary to invoke its provisions. 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f). FISA's definition of "aggrieved person" sets forth only two requirements: There must have been surveillance of the person, and the surveillance must have been electronic. 50 U.S.C. § 1801(k). Plaintiffs have now made the requisite prima facie showing of their electronic surveillance with the non-classified evidence set forth in the amended complaint. That the electronic surveillance was warrantless is essential to plaintiffs' Article III standing to sue defendants for violating FISA, but it is not necessary to demonstrate plaintiffs' standing to invoke section 1806(f).

1 Defendants contend that the “when” for the showing of 1806(f) standing can only be after the 2 plaintiffs establish their Article III standing. The law says otherwise: This Court may rule on 3 plaintiffs’ 1806(f) standing before adjudicating their Article III standing, because this 1806(f) motion
4 is a non-merits motion which the Court may address before making a definitive ruling on the merits
5 of this lawsuit.

6 The sequence for adjudicating plaintiffs’ 1806(f) standing and their Article III standing is not 7 the only thing defendants get wrong in their opposition to plaintiffs’ 1806(f) motion. Defendants fail
8 to understand that the burden of proving Article III standing is an ordinary burden of proof and, as 9 such, is subject to burden-shifting for matters that are peculiarly within defendants’ exclusive
10 knowledge. They fail to understand that the burden of proving standing – whether 1806(f) standing 11 or Article III standing – is on a preponderance of the evidence. And they fail to understand that, 12 because plaintiffs can establish their “aggrieved person” status under section 1806(f) with non-13 classified evidence, the state secrets privilege does not prevent this Court from going forward on this 14 1806(f) motion. This reply memorandum addresses these and other flaws in defendants’ opposition 15 to the 1806(f) motion.

16 ARGUMENT

17 I. THE COURT MAY RULE ON 1806(f) STANDING BEFORE ADJUDICATING 18 ARTICLE III STANDING.

19 Defendants contend this Court may not rule on plaintiffs’ 1806(f) motion until after the Court
20 adjudicates plaintiffs’ Article III standing. See Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 3. Defendants 21 argue that “Article III standing requirements must be satisfied before this case can proceed” under 22 section 1806(f), and that Article III standing “is not an issue to be adjudicated ‘later’ as plaintiffs 23 contend.” Id. at 6. Defendants are wrong.

24 The pertinent legal principle is that “a federal court generally may not rule on the merits of a 25 case without first determining that it has jurisdiction” Sinochem International Co. Ltd. v.
26 Malaysia International Shipping Corp., 127 S.Ct. 1184, 1191 (2007) (emphasis added).
27 “[J]urisdiction is vital only if the court proposes to issue a judgment on the merits.” Id. at 1191-92
28 (quoting Intec U.S.A., LLC v. Engle, 467 F.3d 1038, 1041 (7th Cir. 2006)) (emphasis added). This rule

1 only “prohibit[s] the court from deciding the merits of claims before determining that it has
2 jurisdiction.” Zavadzan v. City of New York, 2008 WL 2074087, *1 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) (emphasis
3 added.) “Non-dispositive matters, on the other hand, may be addressed” prior to an adjudication of 4 jurisdiction. Id. (emphasis added).

5 Thus, for example, in Sinochem International, the Supreme Court held that a district court may 6 decide a forum non conveniens dismissal motion before adjudicating jurisdiction, because forum non 7 conveniens is a non-merits ground for dismissal. 127 S.Ct. at 1192. Similarly, in Zavadzan, the district
8 court denied a motion to stay discovery during the pendency of a motion to dismiss for want of subject
9 matter jurisdiction, because “decisions concerning discovery are clearly non-dispositive.” 2008 WL
10 at 2074087, *1. Likewise here, this Court may rule on plaintiffs’ 1806(f) motion prior to adjudicating
11 the jurisdictional issue of Article III standing, because the 1806(f) motion is a non-merits motion, akin 12 to the non-dispositive discovery motion in Zavadzan.

13 In Alliance for Environmental Renewal, Inc. v. Pyramid Crossgates Co., 436 F.3d 82 (2d Cir.
14 2006), the court posited that a “statutory standing issue” may be adjudicated “so long as Article III
15 standing is adequately pleaded” – that is, prior to an adjudication of Article III standing – “even though 16 Article III standing might turn out to be absent upon subsequent fact-finding.” Id. at 86. Here, the 17 issue whether plaintiffs have standing to proceed under section 1806(f) – what we call 1806(f)
18 standing, see Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism. Motion at 2 – is one of statutory standing. As such, 19 the issue may be decided prior to adjudication of Article III standing.

20 Sinochem, Zavadzan, and Alliance for Environmental Renewal explain why one of the 21 procedural alternatives for adjudicating a factual attack on Article III standing is to defer the standing
22 adjudication until the close of evidence in a trial on the merits. See Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism.
23 Motion at 22; accord, Valentin v. Hospital Bella Vista, 254 F.3d 358, 363 n. 3 (1st Cir. 2001) (“for 24 cases in which the jurisdictional facts . . . are inextricably intertwined with the merits of the case . . .
25 the court may defer resolution of the jurisdictional issue until the time of trial”). The line of 26 demarcation for adjudicating Article III standing is a decision on the merits. The jurisdictional 27 determination need not precede a non-merits decision like a forum non conveniens dismissal or a 28 discovery ruling. A court may even give some degree of “consideration” to the merits of a case before

1 adjudicating Article III standing, as long as the court does not make “a definitive ruling on the merits”
2 before ruling on Article III standing. Alliance for Environmental Renewal, 436 F.3d at 88. The law
3 of federal jurisdiction “is not concerned with the ordering of a district court’s receipt of evidence or 4 any other aspect of procedure; it seeks to guard only against a definitive ruling on the merits by a court
5 that lacks jurisdiction because of the absence of an Article III requirement, such as Article III
6 standing.” Id. at 87 (emphasis added). Thus, where evidence of Article III standing overlaps with 7 evidence on the merits, it is permissible for a court to defer the standing adjudication until the close
8 of evidence in a trial on the merits – or until immediately prior to ruling on a motion for summary
9 adjudication or summary adjudication, see Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism. Motion at 22 – as long 10 as the standing adjudication precedes the merits ruling. Id. at 88.

11 In short, this Court may adjudicate defendants’ factual attack on plaintiffs’ Article III standing
12 “later” – after ruling on plaintiffs’ 1806(f) motion – because the 1806(f) motion is a non-merits motion
13 which the Court may address before making a definitive ruling on the merits of this lawsuit.

14 Defendants quote Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992), for the proposition that 15 a plaintiff must establish Article III standing “at each [sic] ‘successive stages of the litigation.’” Defs.
16 Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 7 (quoting Lujan at 561). The quotation is incomplete. What Lujan
17 actually says is that the elements of Article III standing “must be supported in the same way as any 18 other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i.e., with the manner and degree of 19 evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation.” Lujan at 561 (emphasis added). This 20 means that the nature of a plaintiff’s burden of establishing Article III standing at a particular stage of 21 the litigation depends on the manner and degree of evidence required at that stage. At the stage of a 22 facial attack on Article III standing – whether on a motion for dismissal or for summary judgment – 23 the plaintiff’s complaint need only allege the degree of evidence sufficient to invoke federal 24 jurisdiction. The amended complaint here has done that. See Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism.
25 Motion at 5-15. At the stage of a factual attack on Article III standing, “the District Court has leeway 26 as to the procedure it wishes to follow,” Alliance for Environmental Renewal, 436 F.3d at 88 – that 27 is, as to the manner in which to proceed with an evidentiary hearing to resolve disputed factual issues.
28 This Court may and should defer such a hearing until after the Court adjudicates plaintiffs’ 1806(f)

1 motion. See Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism. Motion at 15-19.

2 II. THE BURDEN OF PROVING ARTICLE III STANDING IS AN ORDINARY BURDEN
3 OF PROOF AND THUS IS SUBJECT TO THE BURDEN-SHIFTING EXCEPTION.

4 In our opposition to defendants’ third dismissal motion, we observed that, in a factual attack
5 on plaintiffs’ Article III standing, the Sealed Document might be dispositive of potential disputed fact 6 issues. See Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism. Motion at 16. More specifically, as we noted in our 7 1806(f) motion, the Sealed Document includes evidence that plaintiffs’ electronic surveillance was 8 warrantless. See Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 11.

9 We have also explained why, even if the Sealed Document were not dispositive of potential 10 disputed factual issues, the burden should shift to defendants to prove matters that are peculiarly within 11 their exclusive knowledge, such as whether plaintiffs’ surveillance was warrantless. See 1806(f)
12 Motion at 10-11; Pls.’ Oppo. to Defs. Third Dism. Motion at 18-19. In their opposition to plaintiffs’
13 1806(f) motion, defendants contend “[t]his burden cannot be shifted to defendants” because “the law 14 is clear that a party seeking to invoke a court’s subject matter jurisdiction must bear the burden of 15 proof, including that he has Article III standing” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 11. As 16 for the legal authorities we have cited that state the burden-shifting rule, defendants say “[n]one of this 17 authority suggests that the burden of proof for establishing standing under Article III can be shifted 18 to the defendants.” Id. at 14 n. 8 (emphasis added). Defendants seem to think there is something
19 unique about the burden of proving Article III standing that precludes burden-shifting where evidence 20 is peculiarly within defendants’ exclusive knowledge. Again, defendants are wrong.

21 The Supreme Court made clear in Schaffer v. Weast, 546 U.S. 49 (2005), that the burden of 22 proving Article III standing is no different than the ordinary burden of proof with its burden-shifting
23 exceptions. In Schaffer, after observing that “the ordinary default rule [is] that plaintiffs bear the risk
24 of failing to prove their claims,” the Court described “numerous . . . areas” where “we have presumed 25 or held that the default rule applies.” Id. at 56-57 (emphasis added). One of the “areas” the Court
26 enumerated is Article III standing: The Court cited Lujan as an example where the “ordinary default
27 rule” applies. Id. at 57. The Court went on to explain that “[t]he ordinary default rule, of course, 28 admits of exceptions.” Id. One of those exceptions is that “[t]he ordinary rule, based on

1 considerations of fairness, does not place the burden upon a litigant of establishing facts peculiarly
2 within the knowledge of his adversary.” Id. at 60 (quoting United States v. New York, N.H. & H.R.
3 Co., 355 U.S. 253, 256 n. 5 (1957)); accord, e.g., Campbell v. United States, 365 U.S. 85, 96 (1961).

4 Shaffer thus debunks defendants’ misconception that the burden of proving Article III
5 standing is not subject to burden-shifting for evidence peculiarly within defendants’ exclusive
6 knowledge. According to Shaffer, the burden of proving Article III standing is just one manifestation 7 of the “ordinary default rule,” Shaffer at 56, which “admits of exceptions,” id. at 57, and which ““does 8 not place the burden upon a litigant of establishing facts peculiarly within the knowledge of his 9 adversary,”” id. at 60.^{1/}

13
14 ^{1/} Regardless of burden-shifting, there may be ways to determine from a writing whether 15 information contained therein is the product of FISA-warranted surveillance. For example: During 16 2000-2002, documents that contained information derived from FISA-warranted surveillance for use 17 in intelligence investigations contained a so-called “wall” to prevent the use of that information in 18 criminal investigations. The “wall” consisted of the following caveat inserted into such FISA-19 derived documents: “Except for information reflecting a direct threat to life, neither this product nor 20 any information contained in this product may be disseminated to U.S. criminal investigators or 21 prosecutors without prior approval of NSA. All subsequent product which contains information
22 obtained or derived from this product must bear this caveat. Contact the Office of General Counsel
23 of NSA for guidance concerning this caveat.” U.S. Dept. of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, 24 A Review of the FBI’s Handling of Intelligence Information Related to the September 11 Attacks 36-
25 38 (2004). In March of 2002, the Attorney General issued guidelines on intelligence-sharing 26 procedures which removed the “wall” between intelligence and criminal investigations, based on a
27 provision of the USA PATRIOT Act which allowed FISA to be used for a law-enforcement purpose
28 in any case where there was also a significant foreign intelligence purpose. Id. at 42-43; see In re Sealed Case, 310 F.3d 717, 743 (For. Intel. Surveil. Ct. of Rev. 2002) (holding that FISA does not prohibit the use of intelligence information in a criminal prosecution). Consequently, after 2002, there was no need for any “wall”-type language in documents that contained information derived from FISA-warranted surveillance. Thus, if a writing after 2002 were to contain a “wall” restricting the dissemination of the information contained therein, the presence of that “wall” would indicate that the information was not derived from FISA-warranted surveillance. See generally ERIC LICHTBLAU, BUSH’S LAW 171-173 (2008) (describing efforts of Foreign Intelligence Surveillance
Court Chief Judge Royce Lamberth and Department of Justice lawyer James Baker to create a “firewall” to prevent information from warrantless surveillance program from being used to apply for FISA warrants).

1 III. THE BURDEN OF PROVING 1806(f) STANDING IS ON A PREPONDERANCE OF 2 THE EVIDENCE.

3 In our 1806(f) motion, we cited American Civil Liberties Union v. National Security Agency,
4 493 F.3d 644, 674-75 (6th Cir. 2007), as well as defendants' own opposition to certiorari in that case,
5 for the proposition that the prima facie showing of "aggrieved person" status under section 1806(f)
6 may be made on a preponderance of the evidence. See Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 15-16. Defendants call
7 this proposition "meritless." See Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 13. They are wrong yet 8 again.

9 Any possible doubt on this point is resolved by analogy to the standard of proof upon a factual
10 attack on Article III standing: It is "a showing by a preponderance of the evidence . . . that standing 11 exists." Lee v. City of Chicago, 330 F.3d 456, 468 (7th Cir. 2003); Retired Chicago Police Association
12 v. City of Chicago, 76 F.3d 856, 862 (7th Cir. 1996); see also United States v. Real Property Located 13 at Section 18, 976 F.2d 515, 520 (9th Cir. 1992) (to show standing to contest a forfeiture, "[t]he 14 claimant has the burden of establishing, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he has an interest in 15 the property"). If that is the standard of proof for a jurisdictional matter like Article III standing, there 16 is no fathomable reason to impose a higher standard of proof for a non-jurisdictional matter like 17 statutory 1806(f) standing.^{2/}

18 Defendants argue that "application of the holding in [American Civil Liberties Union v.
19 National Security Agency] would require dismissal of plaintiffs' claims." Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f)
20 Motion at 13. In that case, the Sixth Circuit held that the plaintiffs could not establish Article III 21 standing merely by showing that they had contacts with "the types of people targeted by" the 22 warrantless surveillance program, 493 F.3d at 653, because they "have failed to provide evidence that 23 they are personally subject to" the program, id. at 688 (Gibbons, J., concurring). On the present
24 motion, in contrast, plaintiffs have provided prima facie evidence – in the amended complaint and on 25 this 1806(f) motion, and all of it non-classified – not just that they were typical of persons targeted by

26 ^{2/} Although the prima facie showing of "aggrieved person" status under section 1806(f) must 27 be sufficient to sustain a finding of such status on a preponderance of the evidence, any inferences
28 that contribute to that showing need not be more likely than not, but only reasonable. See Pls.'
Oppo. to Defs.' Third Dism. Motion at 7.

1 the program, but also that they actually were personally subjected to warrantless electronic 2 surveillance. Thus, American Civil Liberties Union v. National Security Agency is useful here only
3 to the extent it prescribes the preponderance of evidence standard of proof. Factually, the two cases 4 are not analogous.

5 IV. THE STATE SECRETS PRIVILEGE DOES NOT PREVENT PLAINTIFFS FROM 6 ESTABLISHING THEIR “AGGRIEVED PERSON” STATUS UNDER SECTION
7 1806(f).

8 Defendants repeatedly insist that the Ninth Circuit’s ruling on defendants’ assertion of the state
9 secrets privilege precludes plaintiffs from using the Sealed Document to establish their “aggrieved
10 person” status under section 1806(f). See Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 1, 2, 3, 7, 12, 17-18, 11 20, 22 n. 14. But we are not attempting to use the Sealed Document to show such “aggrieved person”
12 status. In accordance with this Court’s ruling of July 2, 2008, we endeavor to make that showing –
13 and we believe successfully – solely with non-classified evidence. See Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 16-19.
14 State secrets are not necessary for us to make the prima facie showing of plaintiffs’ electronic 15 surveillance and hence their “aggrieved person” status under section 1806(f).

16 Thus, defendants misplace their reliance on In re Sealed Case (Horn), 494 F.3d 139 (D.C. Cir.
17 2007), for their proposition that a case “may be dismissed if state secrets are found to be necessary for 18 plaintiffs to establish a prima facie case.” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 12. State secrets 19 are not necessary for plaintiffs to establish their prima facie case. Plaintiffs have now done so with 20 non-classified evidence, just as the plaintiff in In re Sealed Case (Horn) was able to make a prima
21 facie showing of electronic surveillance using non-classified evidence, see 494 F.3d at 145, 147-48.^{3/}

22 ^{3/} We stated in our 1806(f) motion that “[t]he issue in In re Sealed Case [(Horn)] was whether 23 the plaintiff was able to overcome the state secrets privilege by making a prima facie showing 24 without using privileged information.” Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 14. Defendants object that “the state
25 secrets privilege assertion was upheld in that case, not ‘overcome.’” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f)
26 Motion at 11. Defendants have misconstrued our description of the case. We never said that In re 27 Sealed Case (Horn) rejected the government’s assertion of the state secrets privilege. What 28 happened there was that the D.C. Circuit upheld the district court’s exclusion of certain evidence under the state secrets privilege, but held that the plaintiff had nevertheless presented unprivileged evidence sufficient to establish a prima facie case of electronic surveillance as to one of two defendants. In re Sealed Case (Horn), 494 F.3d at 144-45, 147-48. When we said that the plaintiff

Defendants further insist that the Ninth Circuit's ruling precludes "any further use" of the Sealed Document, see Defs. Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 2 (emphasis added) – by which we presume defendants mean to include use of the Sealed Document to establish Article III standing. But there is a proviso in the Ninth Circuit's ruling: The state secrets privilege precludes plaintiffs' use of the Sealed Document provided that section 1806(f) does not preempt the state secrets privilege. That is why the Ninth Circuit remanded the case to this Court "to consider whether FISA preempts the state secrets privilege." Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation, Inc. v. Bush, 507 F.3d 1190, 1206 (9th Cir. 2007). This Court ruled on July 2, 2008, that FISA does preempt the state secrets privilege. In re National Security Agency Telecommunications Records Litigation, 564 F.Supp.2d 1109, 1111 (N.D. Cal. 2008). That means the state secrets privilege does not preclude plaintiffs from using the Sealed Document to help establish their Article III standing if they can make their prima facie showing of "aggrieved person" status under section 1806(f) with non-classified evidence.^{4/}

V. PLAINTIFFS SEEK ONLY TO USE INFORMATION ALREADY DISCLOSED TO THEM IN ORDER TO RESIST A FACTUAL ATTACK ON THEIR ARTICLE III STANDING, NOT TO DISCOVER WHETHER THEY WERE SURVEILLED OR TO OBTAIN CONFIRMATION THAT THEY WERE SURVEILLED.

Defendants persist in arguing that plaintiffs may not use section 1806(f) to "discover" or to obtain "discovery" as to whether they were surveilled or to force defendants to "confirm" the fact of was able to "overcome" the state secrets privilege, we meant that the plaintiff was able to overcome the government's successful assertion of the state secrets privilege by using unprivileged information to make a prima facie showing of electronic surveillance.

^{4/} As in their third dismissal motion, defendants re-argue the question of FISA preemption in their opposition to plaintiffs' 1806(f) motion. Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 19-20; see Defs.' Third Dism. Motion at 23-25. For example, defendants contend that a snippet of FISA's legislative history addressing determinations of a surveillance's legality incident to section 1806(f) discovery "indicates that the disclosure of information concerning alleged surveillance would be governed in part by applicable privileges, such as the state secrets privilege" Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 10 n. 6. Ironically, that snippet of legislative history supports plaintiffs' point that the Court may decide on this 1806(f) motion, under appropriate security measures, whether plaintiffs' electronic surveillance was unlawful. See Pls.' Oppo. to Defs.' Third Dism. Motion at 20-21; H.R. REP. NO. 95-1283, at 93 (1978) ("A decision of illegality may not always arise in the context of suppression; rather, it may, for example, arise incident to a discovery motion in a civil trial."). In any case, as we noted in our opposition to defendants' third dismissal motion, we assume this Court does not wish to reconsider its FISA preemption ruling. See Pls.' Oppo. to Defs.' Third Dism. Motion at 22-23.

1 plaintiffs' surveillance. See Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 19. We agree that
2 nobody may use section 1806(f) for such purposes. But that is not how we propose to use section
3 1806(f). We do not seek to "discover" whether plaintiffs were surveilled, for we already know it. We 4 do not seek "discovery" of the Sealed Document, for we have already seen it and submitted it to the 5 Court. We are not asking the government to "confirm" plaintiffs' surveillance, for we can establish 6 that surveillance without any need for such confirmation. We seek only to use portions of a document 7 we have already seen to help establish what we already know, in order to resist a factual attack on 8 plaintiffs' Article III standing.

9 We never asked FBI Deputy Director John Pistole to "confirm" that the FBI used surveillance
10 in the 2004 investigation of plaintiff Al-Haramain. He did that all by himself in his public speech on 11 October 22, 2007, and to this day the text of that speech remains posted on the FBI's official Internet 12 website. See Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 6-7. It ill-serves defendants' credibility for them to continue to 13 insist that they "cannot confirm or deny" whether "there has been surveillance in this case," Defs.'
14 Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 18, after one of their own has done precisely that.

15 Defendants have recycled an argument from their second dismissal motion that plaintiffs'
16 counsel "conceded" in oral argument more than two years ago before the Oregon district court that 17 "they do not know" whether their surveillance was warrantless. See Defs.' Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f)
18 Motion at 18-19 & n. 12. We repeat the response we presented in our opposition to the second 19 dismissal motion: "As this litigation has subsequently unfolded, we have demonstrated in public and 20 sealed filings how the [Sealed] Document and other materials show the warrantless nature of the 21 surveillance" Pls.' Memo. in Oppo. to Defs.' Second Dism. Motion at 18 n.7. We – and this 22 Court – can now reasonably infer that there was no FISA warrant for plaintiffs' electronic surveillance.
23 See Pls.' Oppo. to Defs.' Third Dism. Motion at 14-15. We do not concede otherwise.

24 Defendants have also recycled an argument from their second dismissal motion that "[s]ection
25 1806(f) applies only where the Government has decided to acknowledge surveillance" Defs.'
26 Oppo. to Pls.' 1806(f) Motion at 10. This Court has already rejected that argument in its July 2, 2008
27 ruling on defendants' second dismissal motion: "The court disagrees with defendants' proposed 28 limitation of section 1806(f) to cases in which the government has acknowledged the surveillance at

1 issue.” In re National Security Agency Telecommunications Records Litigation, 564 F.Supp.2d at 2 1133-34. Congress cannot have intended such a limitation on section 1806(f), for it would deprive 3 section 1810’s civil remedy of all practical meaning, making the civil cause of action “completely
4 illusory, existing only at the mercy of government officials.” Halpern v. U.S., 258 F.2d 36, 43 (2d Cir.
5 1958).

6 Defendants protest that section 1806(f) “has been on the books for 30 years and has never been 7 used in the manner that plaintiffs now propose.” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 8 n. 3. That 8 is certainly true, because no previous President has committed the wholesale violations of FISA that 9 the current President has committed. But it is equally true that there has never before been a case like 10 this, with its unprecedented confluence of government gaffes and public disclosures – from the 11 accidental disclosure of the Sealed Document in 2004, through the government’s public descriptions
12 of the warrantless surveillance program from December 2005 onward, to Deputy Director Pistole’s 13 remarkable public admission late last year. This case is, indeed, one for “the books.” That this is the 14 first occasion for using section 1806(f) in the manner plaintiffs wish does not, as defendants claim,
15 “demonstrate that the provision does not apply in this manner.” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion 16 at 8 n. 3. It just underscores how extraordinary this case is.

17 VI. THE DOCTRINE OF CONSTITUTIONAL AVOIDANCE DOES NOT APPLY HERE.

18 Defendants cite American Foreign Service Ass’n v. Garfinkle, 490 U.S. 153, 161 (1989), for 19 their proposition that this Court should decide Article III standing before addressing 1806(f) standing
20 – and dismiss this case for want of Article III standing – in order to avoid the purported “serious 21 constitutional question” whether Congress has authority to preempt the state secrets privilege via 22 section 1806(f). See Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 20. There are three reasons why the 23 doctrine of constitutional avoidance does not apply here.

24 First, this Court has already decided the question of FISA preemption, so avoidance is now a 25 moot point. Second, “[t]he canon of constitutional avoidance comes into play only when, after the 26 application of ordinary textual analysis, the statute is found to be susceptible of more than one
27 construction, and the canon functions as a means of choosing between them.” Clark v. Martinez, 543
28 U.S. 371, 385 (2005) (emphasis in original). This Court has determined that section 1806(f) is not

1 susceptible of competing preemptive and non-preemptive constructions. Third, American Foreign
2 Service Ass'n itself explains that the doctrine only operates to avoid unnecessary constitutional rulings.
3 American Foreign Service Ass'n, 490 U.S. at 161 (“Particularly where, as here, a case implicates the
4 fundamental relationship between the Branches, courts should be extremely careful not to issue
5 unnecessary constitutional rulings.”). This Court’s decision of the FISA preemption question was 6 necessary to the extent plaintiffs might need to use the Sealed Document under section 1806(f) to help
7 resolve potential disputed factual issues in a factual attack on plaintiffs’ Article III standing. See Pls.’
8 Oppo. to Defs.’ Third Dism. Motion at 16. Indeed, the FISA preemption decision was not just 9 necessary; it was mandated by the Ninth Circuit. See Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation, Inc., 507 F.3d
10 at 1206 (“we remand to the district court to consider whether FISA preempts the state secrets 11 privilege”).

12 As for defendants’ worry that “further proceedings under Section 1806(f) would inherently risk 13 or require disclosure of” sensitive national security information, Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion
14 at 20, any potential threat to national security in this 1806(f) proceeding can be avoided through the 15 various security measures available to this Court. See Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 19-20.

16 VII. DEFENDANTS’ CLAIM OF EXCLUSIVE CONTROL OVER THE SEALED
17 DOCUMENT DESPITE SECTION 1806(f) DEPENDS ON THE VERY THEORY OF 18 PRESIDENTIAL POWER THAT THIS LITIGATION CHALLENGES AND THIS COURT HAS ALREADY REJECTED.

19 Finally, we address a passage near the end of defendants’ opposition to plaintiffs’ 1806(f)
20 motion: Defendants insist that “Executive Orders governing access to classified information” preclude 21 plaintiffs’ access to the Sealed Document, and defendants cite Dep’t of Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518, 22 529 (1988) for the proposition that “the decision to grant or deny access to such information rests 23 exclusively within the discretion of the Executive.” Defs.’ Oppo. to Pls.’ 1806(f) Motion at 22.

24 Do defendants mean to assert their theory of unfettered presidential power over matters of 25 national security – the very theory plaintiffs seek to challenge in this case – as a basis for disregarding
26 this Court’s FISA preemption ruling and defying the current access proceedings under section 1806(f)?
27 So it seems. This Court, however, in its order of July 2, 2008, has already rejected defendants’ theory
28 of presidential power, stating: “Egan recognizes that the authority to protect national security

1 information is neither exclusive nor absolute in the executive branch. When Congress acts to 2 contravene the president's authority, federal courts must give effect to what Congress has required."
3 In re National Security Agency Telecommunications Records Litigation, 564 F.Supp.2d at 1121.

4 If defendants now intend merely to re-argue this point, then we simply stand on our prior 5 briefing in opposition to defendants' second dismissal motion and on the Court's order of July 2, 2008.
6 But if defendants are claiming power to defy this Court in the name of national security – just as they 7 claim power to defy Congress in the name of national security – then every American should be 8 alarmed, for that is the very abuse of power this lawsuit challenges. It would be ironic indeed – and 9 a constitutional travesty – if the President could use a dubious theory of presidential power to squelch
10 a lawsuit that asks the judicial branch to determine the validity of that theory.

11
12 VIII. THE OREGON DISTRICT COURT HAS NOW FOUND THAT THERE IS NO
13 SUPPORT IN THE NON-CLASSIFIED RECORD FOR THE 2004 CLAIM OF
"DIRECT LINKS" BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AL-HARAMAIN AND OSAMA BIN-LADEN.

14 There has been a development of significance for plaintiffs' 1806(f) motion since its filing:
15 On November 6, 2008, Judge Garr M. King of the Oregon federal district court issued an opinion and 16 order in Al-Haramain's challenge to its designation as a Specially Designated Global Terrorist (SDGT)
17 organization. See Al-Haramain Islamic Foundation, Inc. v. United States Dept. of Treasury, 2008 WL
18 4849471 (D. Or. 2008). Among other things, in addition to holding that the government violated Al-
19 Haramain's due process rights when re-designating Al-Haramain as an SDGT in 2008, Judge King
20 addressed the statement in the Treasury Department's press release of September 9, 2004, that the 2004
21 investigation had revealed "direct links" between plaintiff Al-Haramain and Osama bin-Laden. Judge
22 King found that this "is not a statement supported by the unclassified record." Id. at *17. This finding 23 is yet further support for the inference that defendants' claim of such "direct links" depended on secret
24 surveillance of Wendell Belew's and Asim Ghafoor's international telecommunications with Soliman
25 al-Buthi in March and April of 2004. See 1806(f) Motion at 17-18.

26 Although Judge King found a violation of Al-Haramain's due process rights in the SDGT re-27 designation process, Judge King also found sufficient evidence in that case's administrative record to 28 support the re-designation. See id. at *13, *33. This finding highlights a point we have repeatedly

1 made in the present case: Given what defendants have believed about Al-Haramain since at least 2 February of 2004, defendants surely would have obtained a FISA warrant for plaintiffs' electronic 3 surveillance if only defendants had sought it. Defendants did not violate FISA because they had to;
4 they violated FISA because they wanted to.

5 CONCLUSION

6 For the foregoing reasons, and for those set forth in our memorandum supporting this 1806(f)
7 motion and in our opposition to defendants' third dismissal motion, we respectfully request this Court
8 to grant the 1806(f) motion and give us access to the Sealed Document under such security measures
9 as the Court deems appropriate.
